Freedom Before Security

now before the House of Commons are can all be used in court. In fact, that out the right to privacy in Canada. The Canadian Civil Liberties Federation terms it the most regressive action taken by the government since the imposition of the War Measures Act in 1970 — a statement the Times heartily endorses. Like the odious practice of plea bargaining in the courts, there is something decidedly seedy about trading off one piece of legislation for another in parliament.

Under the blanket of "peace and security" the 1972 privacy law would be amended to extend police wiretap authorizations from 30- to 60-day periods. Police would also be allowed to wiretap anyone even suspected of an indictable offence. Nor would authorities be required to inform suspects they had been targets of electronic surveillance, as is now the case. Besides these frightening codicils, the bill would allow illegally obtained wiretap evidence to be used in a court of law. Such a measure is Tucked away in Ottawa's Orwel- in effect saying tap any phone you lian "peace and security" legislation wish, legally or illegally, because it amendments to the 1972 wiretapping one clause negates the need for any legislation that would virtually wipe other wiretap legislation. It becomes ineffective by definition.

Conventional wisdom dismisses such arguments with the simplistic logic that police must have a free hand to combat organized crime. How can the authorities catch crime czars when their hands are tied by stringent wiretap legislation? In a report compiled by the police and signed by Solicitor-General Warren Allmand, the authorities claim that current wiretap laws severely restrict police in exposing organized crime activities. The report implies that the police can't catch the kingpins of organized crime because of the 1972 wiretap law requiring judicial approval for electronic surveillance.

This is transparently false. Before Canada had wiretap laws, the police weren't catching organized crime kingpins. Nor does the business of judicial approval seem to be any great hindrance to the police. The same report states that only one of 556 aptantamount to winking at the police, plications was refused by the court.

That would imply a fairly compliant judiciary, good police justification or

But there are even more important reasons for not granting the police a carte blanche on electronic surveillance. While there were a total of 563 applications to bug under the criminal code listed in the report, there were also 465 applications under the Official Secrets Act. That means 465 people were under surveillance for political reasons.

It is also interesting to note that the average length of the snooping in these cases was 240 days, or about eight months. Who are thesedangerous Canadians? Labor leaders, native Indians, university students? The same kind of people whom the police photograph on the lawns of the legislative buildings during peaceful demonstrations? Protection under the current wiretap laws is very limited for average citizens. To enact these frightening amendments contained in the peace and security package would be like burning the Canadian bill of rights. The wiretap amendments should be expunged from this suspect bill immediately.

Questions of Detail

rett Trees Stump Socreds:

_I would like to comment on several aspects of the article which arose from a telephone call to me on Monday morning from Times reporter Derek Sidenius). My concern is not with the theme of the article, but rather with questions of detail which could lead to public confusion.

First, it seems to attribute to me the statement that "the trees have arrived." I do not recall even having said that, although I can understand the reporter's use of the expression in the figurative sense. The fact is that the seedlings are, and — virtually from the beginning of the growing program which was conceived late in 1974 — have been in the competent hands of the reforestation division. I would not want to be responsible for the impression that the seedlings were physically dumped on us in emergency disarray at short notice and must be disposed of in similar fashion. A planned and orderly process of distribution is being developed.

Second, some clarification is in order regarding possible uses for the trees. To the best of my knowledge it was never the intention to allocate the majority of the seedlings to the actual conference sites. It would be physically impossible to do so and I hope that I did not confuse the reporter on that point. As to other uses, it is worth mentioning that a variety of distribution plans will be examined including some possible uses which were under con sideration before the federal government unilaterally cancelled the urban monstration program. The aim of the distribution planning will be to create public recreational and scenic values net necessarily confined to parks - throughout B.C. as well as to commemorate the Habitat conference and its themes. — Ken MacLeod, Provincial Habitat Co-ordinator, Department of Dropping Detente It is perhaps all to the good that President Ford has decided to drop the use of the word "detente." Lynx-Eyed Cops

Aren't our city traffic cops wonderful opportunists?

In common with many thousands of other law-abiding B.C. motorists, I scraped together the extra-exorbitant ICBC fees and beat the rush by handing over cash and collecting those oh, so necessary 1976 decals well before March 1.

With almost continues torrential rain these past few days when I should have been attaching decals but didn't (can anyone tell me how to get the darned things to stick when the heavens are giving forth so copiously?) it was the early morning of March 1 when I was driving downtown for an important engagement. I was stopped by the keen-eyed opportunists and given a $15 ticket for not displaying

Motor vehicles branch testing station on McKenzie Avenue

Level It

"... Socred secretary ..."

I note a controversy raging in reference to the exorbitant asking price for a site which has been determined as suitable for a needed 300 bed acute care hospital. As I recall the preferred site is on McKenzie Avenue. The Government, through its responsible minister has expressed reluctance to enter into the usual cost-sharing arrangement over the buying of the site because the price asked was thought to be out of reason. There is a suitable site already owned by the province which can be made available for the simple cost of molishing a totally unnecessary facility

I am referring to the provincial motor vehicles branch testing station.

It seems to me that newspapers do con-derable harping about their function in digging up and exposing the little illogicalities of governments, yet I do not the time a few featherbedding mechanics started gathering for themselves nice spurious statistical feathers for the bed they were inducing the government to construct for them.

The present government, being a darling and the consequent result of the gang-ing up of business men against the public, surely would not suggest that the sanc timonious honesty of the private business man might lead to the fleecing of the motorist in selling him unnecessary work claimed necessary for the safety of the

I therefore strongly urge that a government bulldozer (preferably one that has not been inspected for safe operation by a motor vehicle inspector, since the requirement for safety by such for a bulldozer might well be immobility of the bulldozer) be sent to level the vehicle inspection station on Mckenzie Avenue to make the site available for the new hospital. I also suggest that the employees who now work there and bestow their romantic musings on the way automobiles should be constructed by bureaucrats be converted to drug and alcohol therapists and assigned to a ward in the new hospital where they can devote their time to an attempt at correcting the major causes accidents. — Paul Parnchaud, 2310 Quadra Street.

Approximately 90 registered nurses have been taking courses during the past two academic years for enrolment into the school of nursing

The concern of the registered nurses who have been taking courses is acute and immediate. They have been led to believe by the university that the nursing school will be opening this year and they have made plans and committments and given up employment. They now find the future of the school of nursing is very much up in

Violent Devices

I fear the future, for man has a device the brain - which will surely destroy all that has come about. We have invented such monstrosities as the atom bomb; the nuclear bomb, the hydrogen bomb scientists are now racing to perfect the laser beam weapon. Are these necessary? They only increase thoughts of violence Peaceful thoughts must come from somewhere, and like a raindrop falling into the centre of a puddle, the raindrop causes waves which effect all. The handful of people controlling these devices have no right to destroy the world. I want to live a happy and peaceful life, not one of hatred and misery. - Scott S. Benson, Sidney.

Labor's Empty Thunder

By WILFRID LIST

The rhetoric of Canada's key labor leaders has reached a new crescendo in the attacks on the federal government's controls program and aginast the Anti-Inflation Board. And if words could topple a govern-ment, the Trudeau government would long have been buried under the torrent of criticism. But the thunder from the union leaders may not necessarily be a prelude to the storm from their members that one might be led to expect. Civil disobedience does not appeal to

Of course, this country has seen illegal strikes, but usually there has been some underly ing local reason for the walkouts. Quebec labor has been more volatile, but even the common front strikes of a few years ago were less than a thundering success as a political protest against the government's collective bargaining policies.

Where then is all the tough talk from some union leaders taking us? Down the road to political strikes, worker anarchy, or just more sound and fury? I think there's more of the latter than the former in the drum-beating by labor leaders. They don't like the controls; they are undoubtedly sincere in their bitter opposition, and some union members have been victims of rough justice. But I don't look for political strikes or general strikes as a form of protest, although the possibility always exists in the volatile atmosphere of Quebec

It's doubtful that the Canadian Labor Congress could, if it wanted, rally a united labor force behind a political strike. Of course, the AIB decisions could lead to isolated strikes. If the AIB, for example, rolls back the settlement in the uranium industry; it could well lead to a strike. But the Canadian Paperworkers Union and its members have been bled almost to their last drop of blood without moving the AIB a fraction of a percentage point How many other unions will want to follow this course disaster? There may be a day of reckoning in the future; but I doubt that the confrontation union leaders are threatening is at hand. Not even the members that professedly militant United Electrical Workers wanted to match the harsh striking for a settlement higher than the federal guideline figures. And will the railway workers strike, if in the end they are faced with a settlement that must be acceptable to the AIB, if not to the union negotiators? I doubt it. The country has demonstrated before that it can forgo many of the services — garbage col-lection, rail service, movement of grain — for months on end, though with some inconvenience and some hardship. Even the Metro area school strike has not produced

It's one thing to strike an employer and gamble on the balance sheet of gains against one's head against the seemingly impervious wall of the Anti-Inflation Board.

Babies for Sale

There are babies for sale — seven of them — in the small wooden hut down a dirt road off the main highway in this southern Thai hamlet.

For the equivalent of $450, vou can have nine-month-old Niphat, a brown-haired, faircheeked boy with almond-shaped eyes. For $1,000, there is Chamrat, five months older. He is more expensive, the couple who are offering him say, because after all, he required that much more food.

A Big Market

Piem Chang Haroon and his wife, Buaphan, who are selling these children, are by no means unique in Thailand, or in other areas of Southeast Asia. They are responding to a growing need these days, to a proven market for adoptable children that the Western world, pre-occupied with birth control and zero population growth, is no longer able to

Welfare: Little for Poor

As well as writing regularly about social policy I do a fair amount of speech-making on the subject. The question I am constantly being asked on such occasions is why, with so much money being spent on welfare in this country, so many Canadians are still living in poverty The questioners aren't antiwelfare rednecks. They are people who are genuinely perplexed, trying to reconcile reports of welfare spending in the billions of dollars with accounts of millions of Canadians still living in poverty-

Last week's unveiling of federal government spending estimates for the coming year has provided the annual refuel ing for the perennial question. Health and Welfare will again be the biggest spending department with a $10.9 billion budget that represents more than 28 per cent of all federal government expen-

The bold figures of the spending budget raise the ques-tion. The detailed breakdown of those figures provide the

First of all, a hefty portion of Health and Welfare Department spending is for health, rather than welfare, programs. Hospital Insurance and Medicare will cost the federal treasury more than $3 billion

These are universal programs available to all Canadians. If the poor used them to the same extent as the nonpoor, then a little more than 15 per cent of this could be said to be expended on the poor. But a Saskatchewan study of the first six years of Medicare in that province has found that in fact the poor still have a considerably lower level of utiliza-tion of medical services than do the non-poor.

That's not an argument against universal prepaid health services. It just means that more than 85 per cent of this 13 million-plus has to be discounted in any calculation of anti-poverty expenditures. And much the same is true of so-called welfare spending Security and Guaranteed Income Supplement programs for the aged will total $4.5 bil-third will go to senior citizens whose incomes or lack of same place them below the poverty line. Another one-third will go to those with incomes only modestly above it, and the remaining one-third to senior citizens with incomes more than 50 per cent higher than this poverty level.

Once again, that's not an argument against universal pensions. A case can be made that middle and upper income senior citizens have earned such benefits many times over in the course of their working

But that doesn't change the fact that only a portion of this $4.5 billion goes to the poor and the near-poor.

Next to pensions, the federal government's biggest welfare program is Family Allowances. With slight varia-tions on the basis of children's ages in Alberta and family size as well as children's ages in Quebec, Ottawa provides every Candian family with $22 per child each month.

Every family — the richest as well as the poorest.

According to the most recent data available on the subject, one Canadian child in four is growing up in poverty. The converse of that, of course, is that three in four are not. In other words, threequarters of the $2 billion sp on this program is being directed to the non-poor.

If you have been doing the arithmetic as we went along, you have no doubt noted that the more than $9.5 billion cost of these four universal programs represnts 90 per cent of the partial benefits. Only the for?

That comes to all of 5 per cent of the department's ex-

Canadians will still be in poverty after the $10.9 billion Health and Welfare budget has been spent. Because not very much of it will have been spent on the poor.

From time to time, the preposterousness of this situation leads to suggestions that something be done about

A government proposal of five years ago when family allowances averaged only $7 per child each month called for these to be increased to roughly their present levels, but on an income-tested basis.

Under the formula that was then put forward, the lowest income 33 per cent of Canadain families would have received the full amount of the increased allowances while a further 37 per cent received highest income 30 per cent of families would have ceased to receive the allowances entire-

Since the new Conservative leader also endorsed a guaranteed income program for the poor, it may be that Mr. Lalonde has found himself an important new ally.

More than that, if the idea that welfare spending should be directed to those who need it instead of those who don't actually takes hold, we might even wind up with a welfare system that makes some sense. Or is that too much to hope

LIBRARY FEE IDEA VETOED

By WILLIAM FRENCH

OTTAWA - Canadian authors had better not make any plans to spend the money they hope to collect from library use of their books. An Olympic lottery ticket would offer slightly better odds.

That conclusion was inescapable after the question of public lending right was debated vigorously here by the Canadian Library Association's Council, which recommends policy to the general membership. To climax the discussion, the council voted 13-3 against the principle of paying authors whose books are borrowed from public libraries. The librarians sympathized with the plight of Canadian authors, but in effect refused to accept any responsibility for it or feel guilty about it. They think there are better ways of subsidizing authors, and promised to suggest

The decision was a serious sethack for the authors and their supporters who have been urging some form of compensation for library use of their books. It means, probably, that it will be a long time, if ever, before Canada joins the eight countries that already have public lending right schemes The subject will get its next hearing in June at the CLA's annual meeting in Halifax, when the council's negative recommendation will be presented to the general membership. A forum will be arranged so the many views both inside and outside the library profession can be heard before the 1,000-plus members vote. The CLA's public lending right committee will, in the meantime, do some research to try to answer some of the questions raised by the debate, and suggest alternative methods outside the library system for sub-sidizing authors, But the possibility that the council's negative recommendation will be overturned by the general meeting is remote

The participants in the hearing here tried to stress that librarians and writers are partners, and there is danger that debate on the controversial issue will result in confrontation. They didn't sound convincing, however, and the mood of confrontation was never far away. And as the discussion became progressively more complex and was sidetracked into minor issues, it was easy to see why debate on public lending right has been going on in Britain for 25 years without

After fielding my questions about the size of the universe for several hours, Einstein suggested we break for tea. I watched him take three teaspoons of sugar. "You're not the late Albert Einstein," I said.

"Of course not," he said. "Einstein has been dead for seven years."
"What's more," I said, "he never took sugar in his tea.'

"We need men of your perspicacity," he said, drawing the blinds. "Allow me to introduce myself. I am Allen Dulles of the

Chapter Four
One day at the office, a copyboy said, "The late Albert Einstein wants to see you by the water cooler." It was the start of the job every reporter for the CIA dreams

'You are to attend President de Gaulle's next press conference in Paris," he and send him up the wall by asking the following question: 'Mr. President, why is it that France can't cut the mustard anymore

I told the managing editor I had to be assigned to Paris at once. "Who is this nut?" the managing editor asked the city editor. "Buck Bascom, ace reporter," said

"I like his gall," said the managing editor. "Put him on the police beat for four or five years, and then send him to the Caribbean."

It was my first visit to CIA head-quarters at McLean, and I was disguised as the late Clara Petacci. CIA scientists gave me a glass vial filled with powder. 'When you get to the Caribbean," they instructed, "pour this powder into Fidel Castro's shoes." "How will I do that?" I asked.

"Ask Castro a question," they said. "It will take him an hour and a half to answer.

Everyone else will go to sleep and Castro will be too lost in his own eloquence to pour the powder in around his ankle bones." Then the chief came to see me.

"Bascom," he said, "you have the power to crush Communism in the Caribbean forever. This powder is a fantastic new dipilatory which, taken up by the body through the feet, makes the victim's hair fall out. Within two weeks, Castro's beard will molt and he will become the laughing stock of the hemisphere.

At home, I placed the glass vial on the bedside night table by the telephone. At 3 a.m. the phone rang. I fumbled for it in the darkness. It was the night city editor. "Get over to Elm and Main right away," he ordered. "Two cats have just gone up a tree to rescue a fireman.

Groggily, I put on my shoes and sped to cover the story. Returning home at dawn, I was horrified to see that the glass vial had been overturned and was empty. I had knocked it over grabbing the telephone in the dark. But where was the powder, I asked, already knowing the answer

Near tears, I slowly removed one shoe, en the other. The first dense batch of hair fell out at dinner that evening.

At McLean I demanded to see the late Allen Dulles. They said it was impossible. Dulles was allergic to bald heads. I pleaded to be allowed to come in from the cold, and they gave-me an ill-fitting red wig to help me look like E. Howard Hunt and some fresh cyanide pills in case my newspaper fired me. The pills were fakes. "Naturally," the CIA told me. "The agency is forbidden by law to operate within the United States."

Anti-Pollution Input Asked

The man responsible for protecting B.C.'s environment came out Thursday flatly in favor of public participation in establishing anti-pollution standards.

Norman Venables, director of the B.C. pollution control branch, left no doubt in the minds of citizens groups at-tending the industrial pollu-tion inquiry that he is against setting standards behind

Venables, who chaired the 2½-day inquiry, said he considered it vitally important that every effort be made to encourage public participation.

This is necessary to establish confidence between the public, the dischargers of waste and the administration, the public be kept fully in-formed with respect to the terms of reference of inqui-ries of the nature just con-cluded, and generally the purposes of these inquiries."

Representatives of citizen groups at the inquiry felt Ven-ables was directing his re-marks at certain members of the audience who had shown resentment toward citizen in-

in the minimal public attendance at the hearings. "The subject of this inquiry, industrial waste, is something that should concern all members of our society," he said. "We have heard much evidence of the magnitude of the possibility of damage to Proceedings is essential."

At the same time, he said it's encouraging to know that a substantial and influential segment of society is concerned with the many complicated environmental problems facing his branch.

He observed that submissions were made at the inqui-ry from many sources, ranging from corporate organiza-tions, professional groups, government departments to ndividual citizens

Ford Is Lashed

MIAMI (UPI) — Ronald Reagan has launched an all-out attack on President Ford, charging him with lacking the vision and leadership to stop the diplomatic and military decline of the country, His new tactics met with wild screams and cheers.

Under heavy pressure from campaign advisers to take the offensive against Ford or lose the Florida primary Tuesday — and possibly any chance of winning the Republican presi-into the state with a scathing attack on the president.

At a news conference in Orlando, Reagan credited Ford with decency, honor and pa-triotism but said "he has shown neither the vision nor the leadership necessary to halt and reverse the diplomatic and military decline of the United States."

Ford, opening his campaign in Illinois, shrugged off Rea-gan's attacks on his defence policies today by echoing Abraham Lincoln's words: "I dential nomination — Reagan Abraham Lincoln's words: "I began-his last four-day foray do the very best I know

A 35-year-old Victoria man with a record of 54 criminal offences since 1958 was sentenced Thursday in Victoria provincial court by Judge F. S. Green to 22 months in jail for five more crimes.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

Anthony Garfield Brown, 712 Yates, pleaded guilty Feb. 19 to a four-count Victoria charge of uttering and a sin-gle-count Victoria charge of defrauding the public through money received from the B.C. human resources department.

Defence 1 a w y e r Malcolm Macaulay said Brown, a former heroin user, was will-ing to pay compensation after leaving jail.

Green said a two-year term of probation will follow the jail time and Errown must pay a Victoria bank $1,134.50, the total of the four uttered cheques, by 90 days before the probation expires.

CAVEAT EMPTOR

Mothers can be the most vulnerable consumers. Just suggest that they are not doing the best for their babies and they tend to panic.

The food industry has been ringing up sales by advertising "you want the best for your baby, don't you?" Of course the implication is that the best for baby is the commercially prepared baby foods. tables and meats, you need a strianer or an electric blender. And if you stick to makeing baby foods, an elec-tric blender can be a good investment. Don't whip the foods for more than 30 sec-onds or you'll destroy some of the nutrients.

This approach came under heavy attack last fall when an American magazine, Consumer's Report, landed heavily on the industry.

After thorough investiga-tion, the verdict was that most commercial foods had too much salt, sugar and starch. The report also stated that properly prepared home-made foods could be more nunomical ounce for ounce.

Evidently, this article pushed more mothers making baby food at home.

In reaction, one large American company sent over 176,000 flyers to mothers indicating that there were potential dangers in home pre-paration of baby foods and then attached coupons for with anger at this attempt to "scare mothers away from a safe and economical alternative to processed foods." In later interviews, a company spokesman admitted that the dangers cited had never sur-faced in the United States and that the risk was near zero.

The truth is that it is a relatively simple and safe operahome - and it can be eco-nomical.

All the Canadian nutri-tionists I interviewed agreed that absolutely no salt, sugar or starch need be added. In commercial products this was an attempt to please the mother's palate.

In fact, some studies indicate that salt may be the cause of hypertension and high blood pressure in later tional purpose, contributes to tooth decay and stimulates a craving for sweets.

Starch, used to thicken commercial foods, takes up valu-able space in the jars that should be filled with vitaminsand minerals and adds to the cost. In most dinners they can account for 10-30 per cent of the calories content.

If you have been buying manufactured baby foods because you consider yourself a bad cook, overseasoning and overfrying, learning how to prepare baby food may have several advantages for every-one. In the meantime, simply remove the portion for your baby before you season the food for the family. Don't get fanatic about sanitation or sterilization. Let's face it, the environment in which a baby eats is not sterile. The spoon and dish are not usually sterilized and in most cased it isn't necessary. Most of the bacteria in toria branch of SPCA jumped 26 per cent in 1975 while the general work load declined.

Figures shown in the society's annual report for work performed generally indicate a decline in all four categories from similar work in 1974. These include cruelty investigations, ambulance and injured animal calls, pound investigations and animals dealt with at the SPCA

At the same time, it cost the society $134,465 to perform its community services last year compared with $106,320 in 1974.

Much of the additional cost was due to higher salaries and employee benefits ($96,642 vs. $77.521), repairs and maintenance ($2,059 vs. $699), taxes ($6,320 vs. $5,369), \(\) uniforms and dry cleaning ($1,089 vs. $318), veterinary fees ($4,230 vs. $2,630), kennel supplies ($4,173 vs. $3,369),

Pound contracts showed a substantial increase from $55,637 to $88,841 in revenue, to put total recepits $33,000 ahead of the previous year. Deficit for the year dropped by almost $6,000 to $6,854.

Branch president William Leach said he believed a re-duction in the number of strays and unwanted animals admitted to shelter — down by 473 to 9,397 — was due to the subsidized spaying-neutering program.

THE CONTRACTOR OF THE PARTY OF The Bridge Expert

All bridge players have been taught that the standard lead against notrump con-tracts is the fourth-from-thehighest in one's longest and strongest suit. Of late, a new school of thought has been developed, in which it is recommended that the better lead is the third highest or fifth highest. The logic behind this thesis is that the latter type of lead is, less revealing to declarer. clarer.

In today's deal, which arose in a duplicate game, the West defender chose to lead his sixth highest card - and therein hangs a tale.

NORTH ♦ K 10 3 ♥ A 10 6 2 ♦ A J 8 3 474 SOUTH ◆AQJ8 ♥KJ9 4 Q 105

The bidding: South West North East 1NT Pass 3NT Pass Pass Pass

Opening lead: Two of 4.

For reasons known only to herself, West elected to open the deuce of clubs instead of the fourth highest, the six-spot. South captured East's jack with the queen, after

Of course declarer could have claimed his contract after trick one: four spades, two hearts, two diamonds, and one club. But, as he viewed it, he had a 100 per and one vibb. But, as he viewed it, he had a 100 per cent guarantee of making an overtrick without running the risk of finessing for either the heart or diamond queen. And since this was a duplicate game, the making of an overtrick was most vital.

West's opening lead of the club deuce — as her fourthighest club — stated that West had exactly four clubs (she had three cards higher than the ducee and could have none lower). East, therefore, had also started with four clubs. What could be simpler, reasoned declarer, than to now lead a club, giving the defenders their three club tricks. After they were taken, a heart or a diamond lead would, of necessity, be forthcoming, giving declarer a "free" finesse against the queen of the suit led, and enabling him to make three tricks in that suit.

So, after cashing his four spades declarer led a club, and the countries of the suit led, and enabling him to make three tricks in that suit.

tricks in that suit.
So, after cashing his four spades, declarer led a club—and the roof caved in, West cashed five club tricks, and our stunned declarer ended up with eight tricks, one less than the number with which he had started.

If there is any lesson, or moral, contained in this deal, it is a simple one: he who gambles must learn to accept defeat. Let's hope that South learned his lesson.

The Double Life Of Mackenzie King

"It is fortunate that the use of the bomb should have been upon the Japanese rather than upon the white races of Europe.

TORONTO (CP) — A new biography of William Lyon Mackenzie King, prime minister of Canada for 22 years, shows him as a ladies' man who often visited prostitutes. The biography, A Very Double Life, was written by Col. Charles P. Stacey, military historian at the University of Toronto, and will be published next month by Macmillan. The book is based on diaries Mr. King kept for 57 years.

Col. Stacey's book says

Ol. 'Stacey's book says there is "an endless procession of females" in Mr. King's diaries. They range from daughters of millionaires to women of the streets whom the life-long bachelor encoun-tered in nocturnal wanderings in Toronto, Chicago, Boston in Toronto, Chicago, Boston and Ottawa.

Col. Stacey portrays Mr. King as man driven by sexual urges, yet tormented by feelings of guilt. Entries in Mr. King's diaries repeatedly confess that on his "strolls" he engaged in "sin in some of its more terrible forms" and "went completely to the devil with my passions."

Col. Stacey says:

"The precise nature of his sins he does not tell us. But it can hardly be doubted that these 'strolls' were visits to prostitutes."

As a young man in Toronto,

As a young man in Toronto, Mr. King embarked on a program of reforming prosti-tutes. But instead of reform-ing the prostitutes, Mr. King himself fell from grace. Col. Stacey tells of Mr. King as deputy minister of labor in 1991 civing an inspirational woman."

Mr. King worshipped his mother. He kissed her 74 times on her 74th birthday. However, as she lay dying in Ottawa in the winter of 1917, Col. Stacey reports, Mr. King was "back to the girls of the streets."

Mr. King was a straitlaced public figure given to wearing homburg hats, pince-nez spectacles and vests with a gold watch chain. He was Liberal prime minister of Canada longer than anyone else-from 1921 to 1930 and again from 1935 to 1948. He died in

Outdoors Once Again

Outdoor education in Victoria area schools has moved outdoors again with the coming of spring as elementary school students take their turns walking through Francis Park with school district naturalist Heather Crampton.

Older students from Sundance School help out as groups of students like these from Cloverdale School learn their way around the flora and the fauna of the park.

WASHINGTON (WP) - Ray Bolger belongs to a generation of performers who believed they had not only the ability to entertain people but the man-date as well. This sense of mis-sion doesn't let up as the years pass; Bolger, who just turned 72, still tours the country with a travelling revue.

He certainly doesn't have to keep working to be remembered. Every year for the past 16 years an average of 35 million people have watched him replay his greatest role as the straw stuffed scarecrow in "The Wizzard of Oz," MGM's 1939 fantasy classic, CBS will air the movie again on March dance," Bolger says. Whatever it was, it doesn't look like something a 72-year-old man could do. The word is that of all the people on the "Enter-tainer" set—Including a direc-tor in his 20s—Bolger was the one who set the pace.

"Well, energy is my business", he explains. "I keep myself in shape constantly. I have one of these stationary bicycles at home and every morning I work for five minutes on it to get my heart up to 144 beats a minute. I count it by taking my pulse. Now this is a regimen a doctor has given me, and with it I've got my stress-work limit up to about 1,700. In technical terms, that puts me down to the age of a man about 40. Forty-five

What kind of man is Henry Morgentaler? A new biography by feminist writer Eleanor Wright Pelrine provides as much of an answer as we are likely to get. Emotionally-charged and obviously biased though it is, Morgentaler, the Doctor Who Couldn't Turn Away, is of considerable general interest for the insight it provides into the inner workings of "the system." And on readers concerned with the abortion issue in particular, the book should act like a match on a skyrocket.

with the abortion issue in particular, the book should act like a match on a skyrocket.

Briefly, the salient facts in the Morgentaler case as presented by Ms. Pelrine are these:

In 1969, Amended Section 251 of the Criminal Code of Canada stated that "abortion may be approved only in an approved or accredited hospital, after having been approved by a therapeutic abortion committee of at least three doctors ... the majority of the committee must certify that continuation of the pregnancy would or would be likely to endanger the life or health of the pregnant woman." (The amendment has often been criticized as extremely discriminatory in practice.)

amendment has often been criticized as extremely discriminatory in practice.)
In 1969, Dr. Henry Morgentaler discontinued his general practice and notified his patients that he would begin specializing in family planning, including abortion.
In June, 1970, the Morgentaler clinic was raided by the Montreal police, acting on a tip from the RCMP (who had been alerted by none other than the FBI).
In January of 1973 the U.S. Supreme Court "virtually legalized abortion by qualified medical practitioners in the U.S."

In March, 1973, Dr. Morgentaler "publicly declared that he had performed more than 5,000 abortions in violation of the Criminal Code."

he had performed more than 5,000 abortions in violation of the Criminal Code."

In the fall of 1973, after a series of legal delays instigated by his lawyer, Dr. Morgentaler was tried and acquitted by a French-speaking jury of 11 men and one woman.

In February, 1974, Quebec officials from the Dept. of Revenue seized and froze all of Morgentaler's financial assets, claiming he owed more then $35,000 in back taxes. April, 1974: The Quebec Court of Appeal overturned the acquittal and entered a verdict of "guilty" against Dr. Morgentaler.

July, 1974: Morgentaler is sentenced to 18 months in jail. In March, 1975: The Supreme Court of Canada upheld the Quebec Appeal Court decision by a vote of six to three, making Henry Morgentaler the first Canadian ever to have his jury acquittal reversed without provision for a new trial. He began his 18-month sentence.

June, 1975: Dr. Morgantaler was tried on a second charge of criminal abortion. Once again a jury acquitted him, contrary to the instructions of the presiding judge. Because 10 other charges are still pending against him, he was returned to jail.

In September, 1975, Morgentaler's application for parole was denied.

Even a listing of the bare facts thus far is enough to set one wondering. What kind of man would deliberately flout the law, not just once on a point of principle but with the persistence of dedication? The biographical details Ms. Pelrine

Henry Morgentaler was born in Lodz, Poland, son of a locally well-known Jewish socialist labor leader. In 1939, when he was 16, Germany invaded Poland. Until 1944, when he was transferred to Auschwitz, Henry Morgentaler lived in what was effectively a concentration camp in Lodz. Later he was moved to Cachau with his brother, the only remaining member of his immediate family. Both survived and after the war Henry was reunited with Eva, his high school sweetheart. He began his medical studies in Belgium and continued them at the University of Montreal, following his and Eva's emigration to Canada at the end of the 1940's. The young Morgentaler's interest in psychiatry was to lead him to undergo psychoanalysis. Its effects, combined with the tremendous readjustments that life had already demanded of them both, undermined the young couple's marriage. But at least Morgentaler was enabled to come to terms with his prison camp experience. He found an outlet for his need to act decisively in the Humanist Fellowship of Montreal and later the Humanist Association of Canada.

Two Cultures Shaped Kipling

By HUMPHRY DAVY

Seek not to question other than The Books I leave behind.

These lines were written by poet-writer Rudyard Kipling a few years before he died in England in 1939. This was wishful thinking for a man of so many contradictions — a man already labelled or regarded by friends and critics as poet of the empire, laureate of the people, prophet, propagandist and one of the greatest English short story writers.

story writers. Looking back on his last years, it was also wishful thinking on the part of some of his contemporaries, who believed or secretly hoped that his works would not stand the test of time and Kipling would gradually fade away like a cumulous cloud. Since his death, book after book has death, book after book has come off the press about him and there are indications many more are to come. He is still widely read in the United States and France and is a favorite English writer in the

Today some Canadians and Americans are fascinated not only by his poems and stories but also by his observations and impressions in travel and impressions in travel books concerning their two countries. Reading them one can't help wondering at his powers of observation, insight and intuitional faculties.

For example it may be of interest to the younger generation whose knowledge of his works does not go beyond that of Gunga Din and Mandalay that he predicted Canada will have a difficult time surviving as an independent nation. Who yould doubt that today with the country's natural resources by U.S. interests?

Some of his observations on British Columbia and its people must be left to residents to decide if they are applicable today. He was shocked at the racism which existed in the province and was especially directed against Asians — Sikhs, Chinese and Japanese. And he was dumbfounded at the anti-labor attitudes of the business communities of Victoria and Vancouver.

You choose to run your ship of state with a gilt figurehead; but I know, and so does every man who thought about it that your who thought about it, that your Queen doesn't cost you one-half what our system of pure democracy costs. Politics in America? There aren't any. The whole question of the day is spoils. That's all. We fight our souls out over tramour souls out over tramcontracts, gas-contracts, road-contracts and any darned thing that will turn a dishonest dol-lar, and we call that politics. It may also explain why he was never quite at home in England or the United States. People affected by two cultures often find it difficult to settle down. They miss something and they are not quite sure what it is. They subconsciously compare one person with another. But this is not necessarily a drawback for an artist. He is able to see things differently. Kipling was nearly six when he was taken to England with his younger sister to be educated. They were bearded and his wife. These were horri-ble years for the boy. He was beaten and humiliated continually by the wife. On one occasion he was sent to school with the placard "liar" on his back. He nearly lost his sanity.

But to be fair to the wife, with her evenedical health. with her evangelical hell-fire beliefs, she could not be ex-pected to understand a bright, sensitive boy who, like many of his kind, was talkative, asked searching questions, expressed opinions without being asked, wanted to read a lot, and required fewer hours of sleep. In her eyes he was just a "spoilt" brat. To make matters worse, Kipling was sent to a private school unsuitable for a boy of his nature. It depersonalized

India gave Kipling the break he needed. He was able to observe the English and the people they ruled — their weaknesses and strengths. And like most journalists he developed a distrust of politicians and university-trained experts. It was there too that he realized that both politicians and writers of the day were out of touch with the common man.

Kipling was a divided man - a man searching for his identity. But his problems originated from his early English background. It must be remembered that even his mother, though kind, never took her son too seriously.

Two or three weeks ago I mentioned, in passing, the system used by most book editors to separate the wheat from the chaff, of how the better books are placed on a reviewing shelf and the remainder are conmonly referred to as "the bin."

Like democracy, it is an imperfect system, but no one to my knowledge has come up with a better method of coping with the unending stream of books that assails every literary editor.

Occasionally — very occasionally — a minor masterpiece is dumped into "the bin" and occasionally — more than occasionally, alas — a book which deserves oblivion slips through the net and is sent out for review.

You may think this arbitary system is grossly unfair, that when a publisher sees fit to publish an author his work should receive studied and critical attention. If you think that you couldn't be more wrong.

Far too many publishers today, particularing the process of the state of the state ly in Canada I regret to say, know little or nothing about writing. They concern themselves with obtaining grants, negotiating foreign rights, and with promotion. Manuscripts are sent out to "readers", often graduate students — sometimes to half a dozen, one after the other — who are paid small sums to write opinions.

The theory is that if the consensus is favorable a senior editior will then take a long, hard critical look and if he agrees, a contract will be on its way. In practise, sad to say, it is a cost accountant assisted by say, it is a cost accountant, assisted by market researchers, who, more often than not, has the final say.

Publishing used to be a gentleman's profession. Editors were men of taste and discernment. Not any more. If smut and violence sells, then market more of the same is the current policy. The accountants who more and more dominate publishing enclaves are of the same breed as those who have turned Hollywood productions into carbon copies of the worst exports from Denmark copies of the worst exports from Denmark and Sweden.

All this is by way of introduction to a pet peeve of mine. Some time ago I reviewed and panned an obnoxious book which had slipped through the net, a book that had little excuse for existence apart from being way out or experimental, and I was roundly accused by some readers of not being with it.

I plead guilty to the indictment but there is an extenuating circumstance — I don't know what or who "it" is. Nor do I believe that my accusers have any more intimate acquain-

Conversely, "it" could be the best of Nabokov or James Joyce. If only I knew, I would guarantee to embrace "it." But, sadly, I remain uninformed.

I remain uninformed.

There is a great conspiracy afoot. You don't see any pickets or angry demonstrations for it, because the battle is almost won. The battle was to create the pursuit of ignorance which, as we know, is bliss.

It flourishes in the form of pollution called "the counter-culture," glorious proof that never at any time in history has more junk been produced or more people bludgeoned into accepting it as literature (or art).

The pursuit of ignorance is the pride of the The pursuit of ignorance is the pride of the new "natural man." Feel, don't think. Let it all hang out. Do your own thing. A writer is a man who calls himself one. Experience is bad for you. Knowledge is bad for you. The past is dead. The amateur is king. The less you know about something, the truer you are. And so on.

These apologies for books produced by the counter-culture are in part the result of a generation raised in the ugliness of our cities, with no common standards of esthetics. These "writers" are blissfully ignorant of the English language, which is massacred daily by those who never bother to learn its power, its beauty and its range.

I'm not speaking of real talent, real creators, born — thank heaven — in every age. A few manage to survive even now.

age. A few manage to survive even now.

But it remains to be seen whether a public battered by this climate of anti-reason and anti-mind, nurtured in ignorance and sold on fakers, will be able to tell the difference.

Very few still can or dare to admit the cardinal sin of not being with it.

An even sadder aspect of this grim scene is the number of critics who applaud — partly out of ignorance, partly out of a youthfulness out of ignorance, partly out of a yamthfulness and inexperience that knows no better, partly out of exhibitionism and mostly out of a craven fear of not being with it.

Which brings me back to "it." Many years a go "it" meant sexiness. Clara Bow, the movie sexpot, was known as the "it" girl. Now I think, although I am far from certain, that "it" is far nearer ugliness and ignorance.

At all events, if anyone asks you what we are coming to in our popular literature (and theatre, and art), you now have the answer. We are coming to "it." And may God help us!

Life Without Hope

A few years ago, Colin M. Tunbull reported on an African tribe that had lost its collective will to live. Times were bad, and getting worse; no relief was in sight. Shorn of hope, the tribesmen shuffled joylessly through life — until, one by

In a multitude of trivial but all-important social interactions, they supplied one another with mutual support, "helping each other, as if by instinct, as if in answer to a need." The need to give, Des Pres concludes, is as basic in the human animal as the need to receive.
